More than $9 Million in Initiatives to Expand and Strengthen California's Physician Workforce

Health Net and the Centene Foundation gave more than $9 million to help more people become doctors in California. These grants remove roadblocks to medical school and help support current doctors.

The grants include:

- Physicians for a Healthy California – $3 million to build a program that helps kids—starting in pre-K—dream of and prepare for a career as a doctor. By supporting students in early childhood, this project helps to expand the future doctor workforce. And it can help ensure California's growing residents have access to the care they need.
- Charles R. Drew University of Medicine and Science – $5 million to provide full-tuition scholarships, financial support for medical residents, and other resources to recruit and retain future doctors. This will ensure students receive the training and support they need to deliver high-quality care.
- National Hispanic Health Foundation – $1.08 million to enhance the leadership capabilities of Hispanic doctors and their understanding of current health policies through a new career development program. The program provides crucial insights into patient needs, systemic challenges and prospects for improvement.

Doctors play a pivotal role in providing informed and inclusive care. These investments in California's physician workforce will help to shape the future of the state's health care landscape for years to come.
